

Does your family have a First World War story to tell?

Over 40,000 Jews fought in Britain's armed forces. Thousands more were involved in nursing, manufacturing and other war work, or kept families and businesses going through the years of conflict. A century on, first-hand knowledge has disappeared, and time is running out to preserve their stories before they are lost forever.

We Were There Too is a unique cross-community project that will create a permanent digital archive and interactive website to record the experiences and contribution of London's Jewish community during the First World War.

We invite you to investigate and preserve the stories of your family members by creating a Personal Record. You can also upload photographs, letters, diaries and even 3D scans of medals and other artefacts. The site provides guidance, historical information and user-friendly access to a number of First World War archives to help you research your family's story.

Community engagement is a vital part of the project. We will be holding events across London, and involving schools, youth organisations and volunteers of all ages.

Now is the time to record and celebrate the proud contribution of London's Jews – and your family – during the First World War.
